2009 NORTH AMERICAN REGIONAL STUDBOOK OF THE CHIMAPANZEE

INTRODUCTION

The 2009 Regional Studbook of the Chimpanzee is a chronology of the population of chimpanzees (Pan troglodytes) in North American zoological parks. This edition of the studbook lists data that is current through December 2009. Please report errors or updates to the studbook keeper immediately.

The Chimpanzee SSP uses "The Care and Management of Captive Chimpanzees" (edited by Linda Brent), 2001 as its official husbandry manual and will soon be adopting the official AZA Chimpanzee Care Manual.

TAXONOMY

Order: Primates

Suborder: Anthropoidea

Family: Pongidae

In the wild, there are currently four recognized subspecies of Pan troglodytes. The western chimpanzee (P.t. verus), the Central chimpanzee (P.t. troglodytes), the Eastern chimpanzee (P.t. schweinfurthi) and the Nigerian/Cameroon chimpanzee (P.t. verillerosus). Although it is likely that a large proportion of captive chimpanzees are related to wild eastern chimpanzees, the population has never been managed by subspecies and hybridization has almost definitely occurred.

STATUS OF WILD POPULATIONS (adapted from UNEP/WCMC, 2001)

Chimpanzees have been listed as Endangered under the U.S. Endangered Species Act since October 19, 1976, and are listed on Appendix I of the 1973 Convention on International Trade in Endangered Species of Wild Fauna and Flora (CITES). They are possibly rather than certainly Endangered under a strict application of the IUCN Red List Criteria; strictly, they might best be regarded as Vulnerable (Butynski et al., 2000). In parts of West Africa their subpopulations have become small and highly fragmented, and therefore the two most western subspecies can readily be categorized as Endangered, especially given the long generation time of the great apes. The central and eastern subspecies are hunted in many areas, and logging is disturbing the forest habitat of many central chimpanzee populations.

Estimates of chimpanzee numbers in each country of occurrence are highly variable and open to dispute. To arrive at an overall figure most authors combine estimates of numbers at known localities with estimates based on areas of suitable habitat which could potentially contain chimpanzees. Thus Lee et al. (1988) stated that numbers at known localities were less than 20,000 (approximately 17,000) and coupling this with numbers estimated in potential areas of habitat produced a maximum figure of roughly 200,000 for the species as a whole. Similarly the Committee for Conservation and Care of Chimpanzees (CCCC), an international non-governmental organization, estimated the total Pan troglodytes population in Africa at between 145,000 to 228,000 in 1989. However, they pointed out that their estimate included a largely unknown population that is believed to exist in unsurveyed parts of northern Zaire. If this region, once surveyed, is found to be largely devoid of chimpanzees, then the population estimate may fall below 100,000. Chimpanzees are now extinct in five of the 25 countries they once inhabited (Gambia, Guinea-Bissau, Burkina Faso, Togo and Benin). Numbers in four countries (Ghana, Nigeria, Burundi and Rwanda) are so depleted that extermination is expected soon, and another five (Senegal, Mali, the Cabinda enclave of Angola, Equatorial Guinea and Sudan) contain such small, dispersed remnants that the populations are severely at risk. Only ten nations still contain 1,000 or more chimpanzees. The largest populations today live in central Africa, mainly Gabon, Zaire and Cameroon, although a recent survey suggests that Côte d'Ivoire also contains substantial numbers.

ECOLOGY AND NATURAL HISTORY (adapted from Nowak, 1999)

Social structure: The social structure has been described as “fission-fusion” (Goodall, 1986). Individuals of either sex come and go as they wish and each animal has its own network of social contacts. A community has a dominant (alpha) male leader, and there are also power-wielding coalitions among both males and females. Subgroups of a community are temporary and may change in composition often.

Mating system: Chimpanzees are thought to be largely promiscuous, with several males following and mating with a female in estrus. Such activity does occur, but a male may enter a short-term relationship with a receptive female and prevent other (lower-ranking) males from mating with her. An adult pair may also establish a temporary consortship for periods up to three months. Breeding occurs throughout the year. Estrus cycles last about 36 days and the gestation period is between 203-261 days (averaging about 235). Twins are rare. Puberty in both sexes occurs between six and seven years but females in the wild do not usually give birth until age 13 or 14. In captivity, females have given birth as young as 6.5 years of age (Earnhardt et al. 2003). Likewise, males in the wild do not usually reproduce until 13 but have been known to successfully breed as young as age six in captivity (Earnhardt et al., 2003).

Diet: Wild chimpanzee diets include fruits, leaves, blossoms, seeds, stems, bark, resin, honey, insects, eggs and meat. Food intake varies by season, consisting on annual basis of about 60% fruits, 30% vegetation, and about 10% animal matter. Termites are the most frequently consumed animal, but chimpanzees also stalk, kill and eat young hoovestock, baboons and other monkeys.

Space Use and Locomotion: During daylight hours most time is spent in trees and chimpanzees, especially youngsters, sometimes brachiate from branch to branch. Movement through the trees seldom proceeds very far, and most travel occurs on the ground (van Lawick-Goodall, 1968). The most common means of locomotion is a quadrupedal walk with the hind legs slightly flexed and the body inclined forward. They are also capable of bipedalism but usually do so only for short distances. For sleeping at night, each individual, except dependent infants, constructs their own nest of vegetation in a tree, usually at a height of 9-12 meters. Nests are normally only occupied for a single night but occasionally are reused.

Studbook notes

Chimpanzees living in North America are not limited to zoological parks. They are part of the biomedical industry, entertainment business as well as being owned by private individuals. Because of the long history of chimpanzees in North America in zoos, research facilities and private ownership, individual animal records are often not always reliable or complete. As a result, approximately 34% of the chimpanzees listed in the historical studbook have some portion of their parentage listed as "unknown". Although efforts will continue to try to uncover lost records to fill in the gaps, one must realistically resign oneself to the fact that much of this "unknown-ness" is irreconcilable.

The studbook published here is the most complete record of zoo chimpanzees published to date and based on the best current knowledge available.

Scope and conventions

- 1.0 Geographic scope: North America, including the United States, Mexico and Canada.
- 2.0 Chronological scope: The earliest records listed in the studbook are estimated at the year 1901. Data is continuous up to December 2009. In accordance with the Conservation Programs Resource Guide (AZA, 2000) the complete historical studbook is to be published every third year, with updates published annually.
- 3.0 Institutional Scope: Chimpanzees listed in the studbook are individuals who have lived in North American zoological parks or are directly related to such individuals. For instance, individuals living at research facilities that have had offspring that transferred to a zoo, are included in the studbook.
- 4.0 Conventions
  - 4.1 Estimated ages: In some cases, exact birthdates must be estimated. Wild-born individuals have birthdates that are estimated based on their capture date: two years previous to capture plus or minus 2 years. This accommodates the scenario in which infants are captured between 0 and 4 years of age. Other cases may also require estimates, such as individuals from unknown sources. In these cases, birthdates are estimated based on the institution's estimate of the chimpanzee's age at the earliest possible time.
  - 4.2 Data fields:
    - 4.2.1 Stud #: The regional studbook identification number which provides a unique identifier for every specimen. This number is permanent and no two animals, living or dead, should ever share this number.
    - 4.2.2 Sex: Male or female. In some rare cases, such as individuals which are stillborn, the sex of the individual is unknown. This may also occur with very early records when gender differentiation was less precise.
    - 4.2.3 Birth Date:
    - 4.2.4 Sire: listed by regional studbook number. In cases where multiple males reside in the natal group, and parental identification is impossible, the sire may be listed as MULT. Institutions are encouraged to seek methods by which they can definitively identify the infant's sire (ex. DNA testing). If wild-born, the sire is listed as WILD.

- 4.2.5 Dam: listed by regional studbook number. If wild-born, the dam is listed as WILD.
- 4.2.6 Location: listed by the appropriate ISIS mnemonic. In cases where the individual is transferred to or from a private individual, the location is listed as PRIVATE. There are some entries, mostly from older records, that are not official ISIS mnemonics
- 4.2.7 Local ID: individual identification number utilized by a specific institution. This number is only specific within a given institution and may be replicated between institutions.
- 4.2.8 Name: unlike some species, virtually all chimpanzees are given house names – most of which are consistent across their lifetime.
